The county education landscape

County geography | Darker blue = higher 2024-25 homeschool share | Gray = other NC counties

Key findings. Rowan (14.6%), Rockingham (14.1%), Davidson (12.8%), Randolph (11.7%), and Warren (10.8%) have the highest 2024-25 homeschool shares among the county markets reviewed. Durham has the lowest, at 3.5%. [1, 2]

The largest 2025-26 homeschool populations in this group are Wake (15,642), Mecklenburg (11,746), Forsyth (5,989), Guilford (4,818), and Cumberland (4,331). Share and student counts answer different planning questions. [3]

Scope: County data provides context for member districts. It is not an exact count within district attendance boundaries. The map shows county shares; individual registration locations are not available in the dataset used here.

Opportunity Scholarships: NCSEAA reports $589.0 million disbursed statewide in 2025-26, compared with $432.2 million in 2024-25 and $185.6 million in 2023-24, with $134.6 million in 2022-23. See the funding section and county profiles. [12-14]

How these counts were checked

The myFutureNC / Carolina Demography county file supplies the total and sector proportions. Counts were reconstructed by multiplying each proportion by the county total and rounding to the nearest whole student. All four sectors sum to the total, and every homeschool count matches DNPE's published 2024-25 county estimate. A missing charter proportion was treated as zero only where the remaining sectors exhaust the total. [1, 2]

Public enrollment measures differ across sources. The selected compilation has a statewide total of 1,816,528 and homeschool share of 9.1%. Reports using funded average daily membership can produce different totals. Preserve the same measure when updating comparisons.

INTERPRETATION AND PLANNING

What the data supports

County figures and district boundaries

Asheboro, Cabarrus, Chapel Hill-Carrboro, Lexington, Orange, Rowan-Salisbury, Sampson, and Thomasville require shared-county interpretation. Their profiles explain the overlap. Edgecombe's 2024-25 boundary transition creates an additional historical-comparison issue. [7]

Estimates, ages, and movement between schools

DNPE homeschool enrollment is estimated from self-reported information. Its age tables list ages 6-17; public and private totals have different age coverage, especially kindergarten. Cross-county attendance also affects comparisons. These are administrative education-market indicators, not a census of county-resident children or a measure of district withdrawals. [2, 3]

NCHE reports a registry cleanup that may affect 2025-26 numbers; the impact by county has not been quantified. DNPE explains that an inactive tag is a recordkeeping status and does not itself mean a school has closed. A decrease in estimated homeschool students does not show that those students entered district schools. [8, 9]

Public registration directory

NC DNPE Home School Administrator Search

Leave Last Name blank, select a county, and choose Find Administrator to view open home schools. The live search tested shows administrator name, school name, and county. A registration counts a school, not a student; results need not match annual-report snapshot counts. Listing also does not establish compliance with all state requirements. [5]

Registration-location mapping: pending geographic data

The Tableau reference includes individual location and demographic detail from a historical roster. The current public search reviewed does not expose the address and student-detail fields needed to reproduce that view. No locations, ages, gender, school types, or individual student counts have been inferred. The dashboard currently maps county shares. [5, 10]

Aggregate registration counts by ZIP code, census tract, or district of residence would require a suitable geographic source with snapshot dates and coverage definitions. Geographic aggregates could support a zoomable registration-concentration map without displaying private family homes.

Questions for member discussion

Pair county comparisons with district withdrawal reasons, re-enrollment patterns, and family feedback. Districts sharing a county could jointly request aggregate district-of-residence counts. Use both share and population size when discussing enrollment planning and family engagement.

NCSEAA counts recipients funded in either or both semesters. County dollars follow residents attending schools that may be outside their county. Private-school recipient totals below follow the school itself, so the two geographic measures differ.

The dashboard defaults to private schools listed in the selected county in DNPE's January 2026 directory. A statewide school-payment list is also available. The county directory appears in this report's appendix; school payments are linked only by a unique normalized school-name-plus-city match. An unmatched school is not assumed to have received zero funding.

Reconciliation note

For each annual export, county funds sum to the statewide amount and school funds sum to the same statewide amount. The 2024-25 source includes $1,680 with no school name. That entry is retained as "Unspecified in source" in the dashboard, rather than omitted. These totals do not measure all public funding or all private-school revenue.

Source years are ending years: 2023 means 2022-23. Boundary changes, especially Edgecombe's 2024-25 transition, limit constant-boundary interpretation. The district series must not be substituted for the county public-sector totals used in the 2024-25 market-share calculation.

Values sum single ages 5 through 17 for all sexes. County population includes residents attending any sector and those not enrolled; district membership includes students outside this age range. Dividing district enrollment by this county population does not yield valid district market share.

Do not add these series together. Population is not an enrollment sector, and scholarship recipients overlap private-school enrollment. Shared-county values repeat across district rows. Different geographies and age coverage prevent district market-share calculations. No prior-school or causal movement records are used.

INSIGHTS AND STRATEGIES

District cases to investigate

These examples illustrate approaches, not a ranking of districts or evidence that a model increases ADM. The key questions are whether family experience improves, student outcomes improve, and district enrollment grows. Evidence for one does not establish the others.

1. Design around an unmet family need

Lindsay Unified, California, worked with Transcend on community listening and early learner agency, including goal-setting, planning, action, and reflection. This is a documented implementation case, not proof of causal achievement or ADM gains.

Lindsay + Transcend case study

2. Build a distinctive pathway

St. Vrain Valley, Colorado, combines P-TECH, college credentials, mentorship, and internships. Its district description is not an enrollment-impact evaluation. Separate randomized studies support some career-academy earnings and North Carolina early-college postsecondary outcomes.

St. Vrain P-TECH

3. Test a small public learning model

Escondido Union, California, launched Hidden Valley Microschool within an existing middle school to test personalized learning, portfolios, and interdisciplinary projects. Its launch announcement describes a design, not established academic or enrollment effects.

Hidden Valley district announcement

4. Make personalization sustainable

Mesa Public Schools, Arizona, and ASU use educator teams with shared responsibility for students. Emerging comparative and survey evidence is promising, but not definitive causal evidence or proof of enrollment growth.

INSIGHTS AND STRATEGIES

Research and suggested next steps

Microschools: useful to test, not a general remedy

Small size alone is not a learning model. RAND's 2025 analysis found negligible academic-growth effects in a very small sample representing fewer than 0.1% of U.S. microschools, and warned against broad conclusions. This establishes neither general effectiveness nor general ineffectiveness. Define the family need, instructional approach, services, staffing, and ongoing costs before a pilot.

RAND: microschool evidence and limitations | Public Microschool Playbook: Transcend and partners

What CRPE and Transcend add

CRPE's pandemic-pod surveys and interviews highlighted relationships and individualized learning, alongside sustainability problems. These participant reports do not establish causal academic outcomes. Its October 2026 study found that none of three districts met initial scaling targets; staff capacity, policy, coordination, and competing initiatives constrained expansion. Canopy, co-led with Transcend, identifies designs worth investigating; inclusion is not an effectiveness rating.

CRPE: Crisis Breeds Innovation | The Friction of Scale (2026) | Canopy report (2025)

A proposed 90-day planning sequence

Days 1-30: Diagnose. Review grade-level enrollment, withdrawals, destinations, and returns. Interview families who stayed, left, and re-entered. Identify one unmet need.

Days 31-60: Co-design and test demand. Develop one response with families and educators. Test interest, transport, service access, staff capacity, and costs. Separate potential new enrollment from internal transfers.

Days 61-90: Decide whether to pilot. Set baselines for learning, retention, new-to-district students, attendance, family experience, cost, and actual ADM. Confirm participation-counting treatment with finance and student-accounting staff. Define a review date and criteria for adapting, expanding, or ending the pilot.

The sequence is a planning recommendation, not a research-tested intervention or forecast. District membership in this report is MLD, not ADM. No causal model, student-level movement data, or revenue projections are used.
